Musician ready for

folk festival turns 40

His fingers fly as he practises his playing style, ready for a special moment in his career.

Shane Cook, talented fiddler, professional musician and Londoner, is among the attractions at the 40th Home County Music and Art Festival, and there could be 150,000 people there to see him.

Organizers are planning for a record year and, although they acknowledge it's tough to estimate the numbers who pack into Victoria Park, they think as many as 130,000 joined last year's celebration of folk music and other arts.

Cook, who is 31, and will be appearing at the festival for the sixth time, is buzzing for Home County, despite a long career packed with awards.

He is a three-time Canadian Open National Fiddle Champion, a three-time Canadian Grand Masters Fiddle Champion and a Grand North American Fiddle Champion. When he was just 17, he became the only Canadian to have won the U.S. Grand Fiddle Championship.

But playing in London is special, he said. "It's always a thrill because you look out and see so many friends and family. There's always such a great vibe at Home County, too."

He added: "I love that this festival exposes traditional/roots music of great artistic validity to so many people that might not otherwise be exposed."

"Best of all, so much of this music is accessible to all ages. To me, this is one of the highlights of the year here in London."

Cook, who grew up in Dorchester, has a music degree from Western University and a new recording out this fall. He performs at Home County on Sunday at noon, on the North Stage. He is also involved in workshops on the South Stage at 1:30 p.m. and the Centre Stage at 4:30 p.m.

Extra eyes in the sky to cover 'blind spots'

Richmond and Dundas. New security cameras designed to catch troublemakers

MIKE DONACHIE
mike.donachie@metronews.ca

City administrators want to install more video cameras downtown in an attempt to cover "blind spots," and put more violent criminals behind bars.

Officials say a catalogue of violence in the Richmond Street area has led to the move, which is planned as a pilot project for a year.

Downtown already has 17 cameras, and the plan is to install two more at Richmond and Dundas streets. If approved by city council, the fixed cameras will be able to rotate 180 degrees.

A report headed to council's community and protective services committee on Monday describes the effectiveness of cameras already on streets.

Video evidence has been valuable in a series of robberies, assaults and other crimes, including the Richmond Row shooting trial, officials say. Last month, Jordan Faraj was found guilty of shooting into a crowd, hitting a 21-year-old girl in the neck. He is to be sentenced in September.

But, despite past successes, there are still gaps in the camera coverage.

The committee report says police reviewed 209 incidents in 2011 but were unable to find useful footage for 122 of them.

"In the majority of the circumstances the reason for this was the camera position was in a different location than where the incident occurred," the report says.

The extra cameras would cost $5,000 and could be covered in existing budgets.

Crimes caught on camera

- Five men were filmed destroying signs and property at Richmond Street and Central Avenue in 2010. Several arrests were made.
- An early-hours assault at Richmond and King streets in 2010 left a man injured. Video evidence was used in convicting the attacker.
- Two people were charged with robbery thanks to video footage taken in 2011. It is alleged an elderly couple was robbed.

$65K damages. Police, firefighters looking into suspicious blaze

A fire that destroyed a partially built model home on the city's north side Thursday morning has been deemed suspicious, police said.

Firefighters and police responded to a 911 call shortly after 2 a.m. to find the structure at 2004 Gough Ave. fully engulfed in flames.

Damage to the building is estimated at $65,000. The police and fire departments are working together in the investigation. No one was injured.

Allegedly high. Man faces charges after crash

A London man is facing two charges after a violent crash Wednesday evening on Oxford Street near Adelaide Street.

Police allege Michael Gordon, 32, who crashed into a hydro pole, was high on drugs at the time of the incident.

Const. Ken Steeves said police won't publicly identify the drug Gordon had taken until further testing is completed.

Aside from a charge of impaired driving, Gordon is also accused of possession of stolen property due to a licence plate he had inside the vehicle.

He suffered minor injuries in the crash. No one else was hurt. SCOTT TAYLOR/METRO

Doctors getting 'toolkit' to help cancer survivors

The success of saving the lives of breast-cancer patients has led to a new pressure on doctors.

How to help the survivors is a pressing problem, and that's led to a new app designed as a "toolkit" for doctors.

Pink Notes has been developed by the South West Regional Cancer Program, which includes London, to help doctors know what to expect, medically, from former cancer sufferers.

Dr. Jan Owen, primary care lead for the cancer program, said: "We're doing such a good job in general as a society, as a cancer centre, as patients, as physicians at improving survivorship for breast cancer....I think we're over 95 percent now in terms of survivorship."

The guide, which is also available in paper form, will help family physicians make the right decisions, she said.

Physician lead Dr. Tracy Sexton said the guide "outlines the suggested follow-up for cancer patients, and it also lists all the potential side-effects that patients may be experiencing."

Data hints at good news on job front

The number of people in the London area receiving employment-insurance benefits in May fell sharply from the previous month, according to seasonally-adjusted numbers released Thursday by Statistics Canada.

Employment-insurance statistics indicate the number of people who received benefits, and should not be confused with the total number of unemployed people.

In May 2013, 5,390 people in London-St. Thomas received benefits, an eight per cent decrease from April. When compared to May 2012, the drop is even more impressive, with 1,150 fewer people receiving benefits, or a decrease of 17.6 per cent — the second largest in the nation behind the 25.1 per cent decrease for the same period in British Columbia's Abbotsford-Mission.

Featuring After the Bath. Pride films aim to raise issues, spark conversation

London's history will be in the spotlight Monday during Pride Film Night.

Starting at 6 p.m. in Wolf Performance Hall, people can take in a variety of short films exploring issues within the LGBT community.

The main focus, however, will be on a feature film that examines a 1993 child pornography case in London, challenging the way it was portrayed in the media.

Released in 1995, After the Bath was written and directed by John Greyson, who grew up in London and now lives in Toronto.

"I think the film encompasses all of the aspects of what we're trying to do with Pride — education, entertainment and information," Pride London president Andrew Rosser said.

John Greyson COURTESY OF JOHN GREYSON/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Greyson will be on hand to answer questions about the film. He's recognized as a leader in queer cinema, having directed a number of award-winning films and several episodes of shows like Queer as Folk and Made in Canada.

Debut of Comedy Night. Laugh it up, Pride style

Pride London is adding a dash of LOL into the LGBT spectrum Saturday with its inaugural Pride Comedy Night.

Some of Canada's best comedic talent will take the stage at Western Fair District's Yuk Yuk's Comedy Club.

Organizers of this year's festival worked with Yuk Yuk's to arrange the show, said Pride London president Andrew Rosser.

"We're very excited about what they're going to bring Saturday night," he said.

The first show is at 8 p.m., and it repeats at 10:30 p.m., co-featuring Andrew Johnston and Ted Morris.

Johnston, who many will recognize from MuchMusic's Video On Trial, has had people chuckling in Toronto for years.

A past winner of The Great Canadian Laugh Off — the country's biggest open comedy competition — Johnston is taking a break from his regular comedy series, Bitch Salad, to share some of his best jokes with London.

As for Morris, he's no stranger to London or to Pride.

The comedian is a past performer at London's We're Funny That Way comedy festival. He's also done two standup specials for PrideVision TV.

Tickets for Saturday's show, hosted by Robert Keller, are available by emailing info@pridelondon.ca. Admission is $25 with half of the proceeds going to Pride London Festival.

"It's not half-naked people running around. It's families that are marching in support of (LGBT) issues."

Andrew Rosser, president of the Pride London Festival planning committee ties, said Rosser, president of this year's Pride London Festival planning committee, are only part of the equation.

"It's also about family and educating youth about LGBT issues," he said.

To that end, this year's committee has been promoting family-friendly aspects of Pride, which starts Friday and continues through July 28.

It's a fitting time for the family focus. It's been more than a decade since gay marriage was legalized in Ontario, and that means a lot of families in the LGBT community now have children, Rosser notes.

"We want them to come out and be involved, getting together and sharing their stories," he said.

Organizers will have a special area in Victoria Park set aside for kids when the outdoor portion of the festival starts July 26. And, the cover picture on this year's official schedule features an eight-month-old baby decked out with beads and a rainbow-coloured outfit at a Pride parade.

The photo wasn't chosen by chance, Rosser said. It's proof that the annual parade, slated for July 28 this year, is about more than wild — and sometimes risqué — costumes.

"It's not half-naked people running around," Rosser said. "It's families that are marching in support of (LGBT) issues."

What's happening this weekend: Broadway and barbecue

What would a celebration of the LGBT community be without a "fabulous" stage show.

It's coming to Aeolian Hall on Sunday in the form of Broadway — a musical show stringing together some of the best of the best Broadway hits and then some.

The cast is made up of award-winning jazz singers

Heather Bambrick and Julie Michels along with Dora Award-nominated music director Diane Leah.

The trio has been traveling with the show for a little more than year, showing off a repertoire that includes a bit of Gershwin, Lady Gaga and pretty much everything in between.

Tickets are $25 in advance or $30 at the door. Seating starts at 2 p.m. The show starts at 3 p.m.

Other events on Pride London's Sunday lineup include a 4:30 p.m. barbecue at Metropolitan Community Church followed by a community church service at 7 p.m.

Gawker gives up on alleged Ford drug video

Money raised to buy an alleged video appearing to show Toronto Mayor Rob Ford smoking crack cocaine will instead be going to four Canadian organizations.

Gawker, the U.S. website behind the fundraiser, had promised to donate the roughly $200,000 it collected if the video didn't surface.

A message posted on the website Thursday said the cash will be split four ways between the Somali Canadian Association of Etobicoke, the South Riverdale Community Health Centre, Unison Health and Community Services and the Ontario Regional Addictions Partnership Committee.

It said each of the organizations will receive about $46,200.

Osman Ali, director of the Somali Canadian group, said he's "very pleased" by the sudden windfall.

The funds will go toward hiring a youth worker to help local youngsters "stay away from guns and gang violence," he said.

The group submitted a proposal for the funding and learned Thursday it had been successful, though only for half the amount it sought, Ali said.

Asked whether he was concerned about benefiting from the controversial fundraiser, Ali said only that "God has mysterious ways of helping."

Gawker said Indiegogo, the crowdfunding site that hosted the campaign, and PayPal, which processed the payments, each withheld part of the money for their services.

In the message, Gawker editor John Cook said he's "disappointed" the money won't serve to buy the alleged video, which he says he has seen.

The website previously said it had lost contact with the alleged video's owner amid the growing scandal surrounding the mayor.

Ford has said that he does not use crack cocaine and the alleged video does not exist.

Man denied entry to Legoland given free trip

A 63-year-old Lego fanatic from Windsor has been offered an all-expenses paid trip to Legoland after being turned away earlier this month.

John St-Onge tried to visit the theme park on July 6 with his daughter Nicole. The pair drove all the way to the Vaughan Mills shopping centre, north of Toronto, but staff barred them from entering because they weren't accompanied by a child.

"My dad was embarrassed; he felt discriminated against," Nicole said. "And the manager wouldn't even come out to talk to us."

Once St-Onge's plight was picked up by various news outlets, including Metro, Legoland officials contacted Nicole and offered to arrange a return trip. She says the company is going to pay for admission, gas and meals.

"He's thrilled to go back," Nicole said.

Running to the End of the World. Two-year journey will take man from Montreal to the tip of South America

JESSICA SMITH
Metro in Toronto

Joseph Michael Liu Roqueñi has run about 250 kilometres in the past two weeks — just a fraction of a mainly barefoot journey from Montreal to Argentina — and is encountering some emotional hills and valleys.

The Concordia graduate left Montreal at the beginning of June and plans to reach the southernmost tip of South America in two years, running barefoot or in minimal sandals.

He spoke with Metro from Rutland, Vt., on Tuesday.

"Canada was very short, as Montreal's very close to the border," he said. "However ... the first couple of days for me were like a roller-coaster, in the mix of feelings I was going through."

He left Montreal surrounded by family, friends and media. But by the first night, he was on his own and reality set in.

"I've never done anything like this, leaving everything behind, finishing school, putting aside any work," he said.

Liu Roqueñi is devoting the next two years to running because he hopes it will make him a better person.

"All the experiences and situations that I'll be facing, I want to see how I solve them and how I gain from them in ... growing my virtues."

He'll also be sponsoring a charity in each country he passes through. In Canada, it was Pathways to Education.

"When I get a lot of energy ... the runs are easier," he said. "Other days I'm really, really tired and just looking at my watch, the distance and the time. I'm struggling, looking at the pavement, wondering how much more it's going to take."

Liu Roqueñi said he'll need more sponsorship to finish his journey.

"I've put a lot of effort and money into this. All my savings," he said. "So far, it's not happening the way I'd like it to. ... I'm running out of money."

Detroit files for bankruptcy

Best bad option

"Only one feasible path offers a way out."

Gov. Rick Snyder, on filing for bankruptcy.

Once the very symbol of American industrial might, Detroit became the biggest U.S. city to file for bankruptcy Thursday, its finances ravaged and its neighbourhoods hollowed out by a long, slow decline in population and auto manufacturing.

The filing — feared for months — put the city on an uncertain course that could mean laying off municipal employees, selling off assets, raising fees and scaling back services such as trash collection and snow plowing, which have already been slashed.

Kevin Orr, a bankruptcy expert hired in March to stop Detroit's fiscal free-fall, made the filing in federal court.

Michael Sweet, a bankruptcy attorney in Fox-Rothschild's

San Francisco office, said the city would pay current employees. But "beyond that, all bets are off."

"They don't have to pay anyone they don't want to," he said. "And no one can sue."

Detroit's population, which in the 1950s reached 1.8 million, now struggles to stay above 700,000. Much of the middle-class and scores of businesses have fled, taking their tax dollars with them.

The grapevine. Lawyer leaked J.K. Rowling's crime-writer alter ego

The mystery has been solved.

A British law firm admitted Thursday that one of its partners inadvertently revealed that J.K. Rowling had authored a mystery novel, The Cuckoo's Calling.

The Sunday Times newspaper revealed over the weekend that the Harry Potter author had written the book under the pseudonym Robert Galbraith.

Sticky situation for Uber. Heat wave means gimmick may melt down again

Don't scream for ice cream. Just pick up your smartphone.

Uber, the San Francisco startup known for letting people order private drivers in sleek black cars using a smartphone app, is offering an ice-cream-on-demand service — for one day only — in 35 cities around the world, including New York, Philadelphia, London, Singapore and Rome.

Friday's stunt, an expansion of last year's ice cream promotion, comes in the midst of a sticky heat wave in New York City and elsewhere. Last year, people in seven U.S. and Canadian cities could use the Uber app to summon an ice cream truck hired by Uber to their location, provided they purchased a minimum number of treats. But

Bonjour, touristes! France fights its bad reputation

C'est difficile no more?

France is the most visited country in the world, but has long had a reputation for being unwelcoming to visitors

There are no trash cans on the Champs-Élysées. Parisian department stores, as well as shops and restaurants across the country, are closed on Sundays. And pickpockets swarm the Eiffel Tower and the Louvre.

France has long had a reputation — particularly in the English-speaking world — for being a bit difficult to visit. We love to hate it, with its surly waiters and superior shopkeepers. But we also love to love it: More people visit France than any other country in the world.

But now, after years of casually riding a reputation for stunning monuments and world-class food, the French are starting to talk about tourism as an economic benefit — and one they need to do more to capitalize on. This is a sea change in a country that has long prided itself on not doing anything as gauche as catering to visitors.

"The problem is that in France we don't value jobs in tourism," says Didier Arino, a director of the consultancy Protourisme. "We conflate services with servitude."

The numbers show that something is amiss. With the draws of Paris, Alpine skiing and some of the ritziest Mediterranean resorts, France has been the most-visited country for every year there are statistics in the World Bank database, welcoming 83 million foreign tourists in 2012. But it has never sat atop the list of places where visitors spend the most. There, it has been No. 3, behind the U.S. and Spain, for several years.

France's Socialist government has vowed to change this.

"I want to make France No. 1, period," Tourism Minister Sylvia Pinel told reporters last year as a new government took the reins and laid out its priorities. Improving France's "welcome" was one of those — creating a true tourism policy for the first time, Pinel said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

While swarms of journalists camped outside St. Mary's hospital awaiting the Duchess of Cambridge, the rest of the world took to Twitter to weigh in. One twit, @LittleBeckiee, said, "Kate & William. Please hold the royal baby up like Simba."

10 Cory Monteith. The Canadian actor/Glee star died in a Vancouver hotel room of drug toxicity. Even acting Vancouver Police Chief Doug LePard, who confirmed his death Saturday night, was touched by the sad news: "I watched Glee regularly with my daughters, and I know there will be shock and sadness in many households with the news of his tragic death." Another promising actor lost to addiction.

RE: Not Every Dog Has Its Day,
published July 17

Thank you Mike Benhaim, for putting my thoughts so poignantly!

Children cause far more disturbances and messes than dogs do in stores/shopping malls ... wherever.

It's such a shame that it only takes one complaint/dog hater, or one bad owner/dog (and usually a very minor occurrence) to make store owners ban dogs completely.

It doesn't make sense.

I was once in a video store and brought my little Boston Terrier in with me. I was told she couldn't be in there (by a teenage employee know-it-all). I asked why, and was told she might make a mess (pee). So I picked her up and said, there, now there's no chance of that.

He said again, well she still can't be in here, so I said, call the police if it's that big of a problem (I know it was a bit extreme but I was extremely annoyed), and continued shopping.

Happy 95th birthday, Mandela

SCHALK VAN ZUYDAM/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

South Africa celebrates milestone

Children react at a school as they celebrate former South African president Nelson Mandela's birthday in Cape Town, South Africa, Thursday. South Africa celebrated the leader's 95th birthday, a milestone capped by news that his health was improving.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

His legacy

- Mandela was jailed for 27 years under apartheid and led a difficult transition to democracy, becoming president in all-race elections in 1994. He served one five-year term, evolving into a global statesman and pursued charities after.

Hitting home

Mandela "is proof that one person can change the world."

NDP Foreign Affairs Critic Paul Dewar
He added he remains an inspiration despite his poor health.

Prime Minister Stephen Harper said in a statement that Mandela is "a model of humility, grace and forgiveness, whose life and teachings are an inspiration for all those who strive for freedom, democracy and reconciliation." Canadians across the country recognized the day.

Health improving in hospital

Mandela remains very fragile. The news that his health improved was another turn in the life of a man who became a global figure of sacrifice and reconciliation during the fight against white minority rule in South Africa.

Synopsis

The Perron family believe they've found their dream home — a tidy little farmhouse near Harrisville, R.I. It's the perfect place to raise five little girls. But a malevolent presence is hell bent on turning their dreams to nightmares. When the bumps in the night morph into happenings a little more freaky, the family calls in paranormal investigators Ed (Patrick Wilson) and Lorraine (Vera Farmiga) Warren. But even these bona fide ghostbusters are no match for the evil that lurks around the farm. Liz Brown fills in for Richard Crouse this week.

Seeing is not believing

The Conjuring. Film's chills only work if you think that spirits walk among us

Liz: Mark, ever since I made the decision to live alone last year, I've avoided all scary movies. But in that 12-month hiatus, it seems nothing has changed in the genre. The Conjuring is full of the same old clichés: a freaky doll, a haunted music box and a spooky old house with a cellar full of cobwebs. What did you think of it all?

MB: It has all the clichés but with superior acting and direction. But Liz, here's the thing: if you don't believe in ghosts you just won't be frightened. It's not the supernatural that scares me, it's my mortgage.

LB: That's exactly the reason I'm a proud renter. But I'm with you on the non-believing — maybe back in my Catholic school days the scares would've resonated, but I'm not losing any sleep over this one. However, there were a few jump-worthy scenes that had me nearly spilling my popcorn. Did you close your eyes at all?

MB: Only when I was tired from my busy day. What I did like about the movie was the interesting relationship between the married couple investigating the paranormal activities. I wish the movie was more about them. I also liked the 1971 setting, which made the movie spooky although I don't know which was scarier: the wallpaper or the moustaches.

LB: The wallpaper, definitely! It made me think of The Shining's Stanley Hotel. I was half expecting ghost twins to walk down the halls of the farmhouse. As for the Warrens, I found them hard to warm up to. I much prefer Vera Farmiga when she's two-timing Mark Wahlberg and Matt Damon in The Departed. But what about the poor haunted family, had you no sympathy for them?

MB: Sympathy for Lili Taylor, yes, with her makeup smeared like that. But as for the rest of them, next time get a condo!

Jason Statham: Is he the last action hero?

Redemption. Actor's latest film allows him to flex some dramatic muscle — but he still loves breaking things

MATTHEW PRIGGE

Metro World News in New York

As everyone knows, Jason Statham is among a dying breed of old-school macho ass-kickers. He's more than that, though. Before his screen debut in Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels (not an action film), he was a member of Britain's National Diving Squad, a model and worked in the black market.

He's still versatile: His latest, Redemption, made by Dirty Pretty Things and Eastern Promises writer Steven Knight, is a drama (with some action) in which he plays an ex-soldier with PTSD who lives on the streets — until he steals someone's identity and falls for a nun.

Redemption concerns homelessness, class warfare and other serious issues. What drew you to it?

I thought it was different, but not so different that it wouldn't be enjoyable. There's a limit to doing something just for the sake of being different. And I like dark tales; I like thrillers. I thought this would be the kind of movie I'd want to see, so I might as well be in it.

Were you consciously seeking out something that would be different from most of your action films?

It's not like, "Oh my God, here's my chance to do something so different!" It's never like that. It's more that this is a quality story. This is a quality movie. I want to do that. It just turns out that it's a bit different from some of the others I've done.

Did you do much research?

We met some of the soldiers who have been in the war and came back, and a lot of them have disabilities: They lost an eye, lost a leg. You think, "F—, that's really out there, we never see that." It's not an exposed subject, these soldiers who come back from the war. Ten per cent of the homeless people (in London) are from the military forces.

You didn't start out as an action actor. How did you get into it?

I just kind of tumbled into it. I never had an idea to do it. I had a ton of years of experience in martial arts and gymnastics. My dad was a gymnast and a boxer. When I started, I was just like, "OK, now I get to throw some silly stuff around. Let's see if I can do it." The next thing you know, it worked. I wasn't being cast in period dramas back in England. You have to figure out some other way to make money.

You could still do that, though. You could do something Dickensian.

I don't know how many thrills I'd get out of wearing those tights every day.

Jason Statham says he just kind of tumbled into action acting. GETTY IMAGES

Reitman says Ghostbusters is the Wizard of Oz of its generation. HANDOUT

Who you gonna call?

Not Murray.

Ghostbusters filmmaker says a third one could go ahead without the actor, but only if it recreates the 'magic' of the first

Could Ghostbusters 3 go ahead without co-star Bill Murray? Filmmaker Ivan Reitman says it's a possibility.

The director-producer of the original 1984 supernatural comedy film and its sequel says Murray — who played one of four parapsychologists in both instalments — hasn't read any draft of a screenplay for a possible third feature. And he doesn't think the actor wants to be in it. "If we get it right for ourselves and we end up trying to make the movie, we'll see if he does it or not," Reitman said Wednesday.

But the other stumbling block is striking the right tone.

"People seem to love it today as much as they loved it in 1984," said the Toronto-raised comedy master.

So while the rest of the cast and creators are game for a third film, they'll only do it if they can tap into the "magic" of the original, he added.

"We tried to do another one back in the '90s to mixed success," said Reitman. "It was successful commercially but it didn't really satisfy me or any of the other members of our group creatively. We didn't quite get it right, because it's a very tricky movie."

Big Star shines in new rockumentary

Almost famous. New film tells the story of a band that achieved success posthumously

Big Star's 1972 debut, #1 Record, did not turn the Memphis quartet into what their name implies; the album didn't even come close to charting at the position that its title suggests.

They would, however, eventually influence the next generation of alternative rock music, but this initial burst of self-imposed tragic and comic irony would go on to haunt the band.

Director Drew DeNicola wanted to get away from this disparity when making the new documentary, Big Star: Nothing Can Hurt Me.

"The sensibility of these guys wasn't a commercial one, even if they thought so. The Big Star name was slightly tongue-in-cheek," he says.

"It wasn't even in the DNA of the band. It wasn't even in that music for it to be successful at that time."

Tongue-in-cheek or not, Big Star was perpetually in the right place at the wrong time.

They played the type of guitar pop that earned them comparisons to The Beatles at a time when the biggest bands were inflated and gimmicky (think: Kiss or ELO).

They got a record deal, and the label declared bankruptcy before their second album could leave the warehouse.

Founders fled in frustration and one died in a car crash before Big Star achieved posthumous popularity in the '80s.

DeNicola and codirector Olivia Mori wring out a sweet story of the participants who tried so hard to make it work for the band.

"I don't like to dwell on the whole element of, 'They didn't make it,'" says DeNicola.

"I'd just like to dispense with that and talk about the story of the people in the band and the music," he added.

Frances Ha

Director. Noah Baumbach

Stars. Greta Gerwig, Mickey Sumner

• • • • •

The seventh film from Greenberg director Noah Baumbach isn't so much a traditional narrative as it is a character study of Frances (Greta Gerwig), an under-employed dancer struggling to find herself in New York City. It plays like a cleaned up black-and-white version of Girls; an emotionally rich and funny portrait of 20-something ennui. The supporting cast (including Girls star Adam Driver) is strong, but this is Gerwig's movie. Once again — after films like Lola Versus and Arthur — she hands in an authentic, affecting and purely wonderful performance. RICHARD CROUSE

RED (short for Retired, Extremely Dangerous) was a surprisingly fun and funny star vehicle for a group of aging actors. Hoping to catch lightning twice, this sequel reunites characters from the original film with an expanded cast and international locales. Poor pacing muddles an already convoluted plot that tries valiantly to balance the addition of Catherine Zeta-Jones, Anthony Hopkins and Lee Byung-hun. But it's the interplay between leads Willis, Parker and especially Malkovich that keeps the film on its feet.

Netflix gems to make history at this year's Emmys

65th ceremony. Neil Patrick Harris to host awards as American Horror Story bags most nominations with 17

Netflix's House of Cards made Emmy history Thursday with a top drama series nomination, the first time that television's leading awards have recognized a program delivered online as equal in quality to the best that TV has to offer. The nomination, one of nine nods earned by the political thriller, is a marker in the unfolding revolution in how we receive and watch video entertainment.

"It's really groundbreaking," said Ted Sarandos, chief content officer for Netflix. "It's beyond our most bold expectations. We were thinking a single nomination would be a win ... It's as much a win for Internet television as it is for the content creators."

The most Emmy nominations, 17, went to American Horror Story: Asylum. Close behind was Game of Thrones with 16 nods, while Saturday Night Live and the Liberace biopic Behind the Candelabra earned 15 nominations each, including nods for stars Michael Douglas and Matt Damon. The bonanza of nominations for Game of Thrones is the swords-and-fantasy show's most-ever and includes a best drama series nod and

Harris to the rescue

Filling in. A host had gone missing for the 2013 Emmy nominations on Thursday, so in stepped — who else? — Neil Patrick Harris. The Academy of Television Arts & Sciences said actress Kate Mara from House of Cards was unable to make it because her plane had a mechanical malfunction and couldn't take off from Santa Fe, where she is on location. So Harris stepped in to co-host with Aaron Paul of Breaking Bad.

three acting bids, including a supporting nod for Peter Dinklage.

House of Cards stars Kevin Spacey and Robin Wright received acting bids, along with a number of other primarily big-screen actors who have migrated to TV for powerhouse projects, with Douglas and Damon among them. Joining House of Cards and Game of Thrones in the best drama series category are Breaking Bad, Downton Abbey, Mad Men and last year's winner, Homeland.

Mad Men, which last year missed out on the best drama trophy that would have been its record-setting fifth, eclipsing fellow four-time winners Hill Street Blues, L.A. Law and The West Wing, gets another shot this year. The major broadcast networks were shut out of the prestigious category, a repeat of last year and a particular blow with the entry of Netflix's streamed drama. Boardwalk Empire was the only show not to return in the category, its spot claimed by House of Cards.

In the comedy series category, nominees are The Big Bang Theory, Girls, Louie, Modern Family, Veep and 30 Rock, recognized for its final season. Arrested Development, didn't earn a best comedy series but scored three nominations, including one for star Jason Bateman. Some pundits thought it might earn online's first best comedy series nod, given that it won a trophy in the category for Fox before the network cancelled it. A six-year-old TV academy rules change allows online entries to compete with cable and broadcast programs, although so far Internet shows have popped up only in lower-profile categories. That changed with the 65th Primetime Emmys.

The nominations were announced by Aaron Paul, a previous winner for Breaking Bad and nominated again this year, and Emmy host Neil Patrick Harris. An in-demand emcee, the How I Met Your Mother star earned a bid for hosting Broadway's Tony Awards. Joining Spacey in the contest for best drama series actor are Hugh Bonneville of Downton Abbey; Jon Hamm of Mad Men; Jeff Daniels of The Newsroom and Damian Lewis of Homeland, last year's winner. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

The Word

It would appear that Gallagher's got someone looking back in anger

MELINDA TAUB
Metro World News

There's a $3 million child support case making its way through the New York family courts right now. Officially, it's known as Anonymous Vs. Anonymous, but according to the Daily News, one of those Anonymouses is Oasis frontman Liam Gallagher, and the other is reporter Liza Ghorbani, who once profiled him for the New York Times.

Ghorbani wrote about Gallagher in 2010 for the Grey Lady's A Night Out With... series. A source close to Ghorbani claims that she and the married rocker began an affair that night, which continued on and off until Ghorbani told him she was pregnant last year.

The source claims it was the news of her pregnancy that led Gallagher to cut off contact — he was apparently worried his wife would find out what he'd been up to. That plan is probably shot.

Mama, eye love you: Bieber branded once again

Justin Bieber's tattoo obsession continues, his latest addition being a photo-realistic human eye on the inside of his elbow, according to E! News. The popstar later identified the inspiration behind the tat, posting a picture of it on Instagram along with the caption, "Moms always watching."

To hear his favourite tattoo artist tell it, getting the work done took some scheduling. "Justin called me around 10:30 p.m. last night and asked if I could open up the shop. We are both so busy, and our schedules are pretty hectic, so I opened up the shop, and he came in around 4 a.m.," New York City-based artist Keith Bang Bang McCurdy says.

"Justin chose a female eye that best represented what he was looking for. I did the tattoo in black and white, because it complemented his other tattoos. I wanted it to complement him, and not be a distraction from him."

Beer shows its softer side

Peter Rockwell

My suggestion last week that only wine and spirits make for interesting cocktails got under the cap of beer-loving readers who emailed me their favourite brew-based recipes.

While I've never found the idea of Guinness and sparkling wine appealing (it's called a Black Velvet), the classic shandy can be found on my back deck on hot summer days.

Said to have originated in Britain (where a shandygaff was a blend of ale and ginger beer), the recipe has evolved into a blend of any style of beer and either ginger ale or lemonade.

Making one is easy. Over ice, fill a glass with equal portions of the booze and mix, and you're good to go. I find sparkling lemonade really livens up the drink and enhances its thirst-quenching properties.

If home bartending just isn't your thing, you can buy a pre-mixed version.

Rickard's Shandy (473 ml, $2.35-$3.39) combines the Canadian brewer's lager with lemonade, creating an interpretation with a freshly squeezed, lemony aroma and a light flavour trail of lemon and soft malt.

Fried Corn Tortilla Chips

- Canola or vegetable oil, for frying
- 1/2 tsp cinnamon
- 1 tsp sugar
- Pinch salt
- Four 6-inch fresh corn tortillas

Into saucepan, pour about 1/2 inch of oil. Over medium-high, heat until it reaches 400 F on deep-fry thermometer. In small dish, mix cinnamon, sugar and salt; set aside. Line plate with paper towels. Cut each tortilla into 6 wedges. Three at a time, use a slotted spoon to lower wedges into oil. Cook 15 seconds per side, then use slotted spoon to transfer to paper towel-lined plate. Sprinkle with a bit of the cinnamon-sugar mixture. Repeat with remaining tortillas.

Salt and Pepper Baked Whole-Wheat Tortilla Chips

- Olive oil cooking spray
- Two 8-inch whole-wheat tortillas
- Kosher salt and ground black pepper

Heat the oven to 400 F. Lightly coat a rimmed baking sheet with cooking spray. Cut each tortilla into 8 wedges, then arrange them on the prepared baking sheet. Spritz the tops of the tortilla wedges with cooking spray, then season them lightly with salt and pepper. Bake for 8 to 10 minutes, or until crisp and lightly browned. Remove from the oven, let cool for a moment, then taste and season with additional salt and pepper, if needed.

Baked Whole Wheat Pita Chips

- Two large whole-wheat pita pockets
- Olive oil
- Kosher salt
- Garlic powder
- Smoked paprika

Heat oven to 400 F. Split each pita pocket into 2 rounds. Cut each round into 8 wedges, then place all wedges in bowl. Drizzle with olive oil, tossing to ensure all are evenly coated. Sprinkle wedges with salt, garlic powder and smoked paprika, tossing to coat. Arrange wedges in even layer on rimmed baking sheet. Bake for 15 to 20 minutes, or until crisp and lightly browned. Serve immediately. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS peanuts, raisins, flax seed, cinnamon and salt.

2. Place honey, peanut butter, brown sugar and butter in a medium saucepan set over medium-high heat. Stir constantly until sugar is dissolved and mixture boils around edges, about 1 min. Pour over oatmeal mixture and stir well to combine.

3. Using damp fingers, press firmly into pan. Bake in preheated oven until edges are a deep golden brown, 30 mins.

4. Cool in pan. Using the parchment paper, remove to a cutting board then discard parchment. Slice into bars and store in an airtight container.

Summertime and the entertaining is easy

Outdoor living. Enjoy this season, because it should be the easiest for hosting, says culinary author Susan Spungen

ALISON BOWEN

Metro World News

Ah, summer. The time when you can invite loads of friends over with the easiest entertaining plan — throwing food on a grill or bringing sides for the friend who has outdoor space.

If you're the one hosting, soak up this time, because it should be the easiest entertaining season of the year, says Susan Spungen, author of What's a Hostess to Do? and whose culinary past includes working on films like Eat, Pray, Love.

"Summer is just the time to really have fun and not work too hard, and everything should be easy — the food, the mood, everything,"

Relax. Quick foods such as corn on the cob are crowd-pleasers. ISTOCK PHOTOS

she tells us. She gave us a few tips to make hosting look, and feel, easy.

What can you do for summer entertaining that you could never do otherwise?

For one thing, it's just a lot easier because first of all, you can entertain outside, which makes cleanup very easy. You don't have to mess up your house, and you can use more disposables.

All of the easy things are more acceptable in the summer, in a more casual setting, and there's so many nice options — not only for paper, but melamine plates and glasses that you can get now. ... Also, the cooking is so much easier.

An acceptable course is corn on the cob — not only acceptable, but delicious, and how much easier can you get than that?

You can get a simple compound butter, like a basil butter, and put that on corn, and it becomes something really special.

What's your go-to plan for a quick get-together?

A nice bottle of rosé, and if it's really a last-minute thing, I think a pasta can be wonderful. Just toss (in) all the best things from the farmers' market.

I made something the other night — I impressed myself, it was so delicious. Everything I got in one farm — peas, baby zucchinis, corn and I made some caramelized onions — and I just tossed the whole thing with some goat cheese, which melts into a sauce. It was absolutely divine.

More tips

Some extra tips for summertime hosting from Susan Spungen, author of What's a Hostess to Do?

- Decor. Use fresh flowers for decorating. Pick up some simple flowers from a farm stand or farmers' market on the way home.
- Snacks. Spread snacks around the party. Guests tend to congregate wherever the snacks are, so put some dishes of nuts and other small bites in spaces around where you want your guests to gather and meet each other.
- Bug off. Use citronella torches to keep bugs away and create a cosy setting.
- Keep it simple. Skip the Pinterest-inspired centerpiece effort and simply use fruit. Fill a bowl with fruits you picked up at the farmer's market, such as apricots or cherries. Conveniently, this also doubles as dessert.

- Drink up. Serve daiquiris with frozen fruit. This is a time-saver if you're rushing home to host after work. It also allows you to skip some of the ice, and the colour won't brown like fresh fruit.

Kings core to stay intact for several years to come

Dustin Brown looked at the core of the Los Angeles Kings, and his decision was easy. He wanted to stay long-term, and he wanted to get the deal done himself.

Brown did just that, signing for eight years and $47 million US, ensuring that this 2012 Stanley Cup champion Kings team would have its captain around through the 2021-22 season. The right-winger joined goaltender Jonathan Quick, defencemen Drew Doughty and Slava Voynov, and forwards Mike Richards and Jeff Carter as players signed for at least the next six seasons.

Brazil still the right choice for 2014: Government

Brazil's government defended the country's status as the 2014 World Cup host on Thursday, after FIFA president Sepp Blatter warned that recent protests there meant it might have been the wrong choice.

At their height, more than one million people took to the streets during last month's Confederations Cup, angry at Brazil's poor public services, contrasted with almost $14 billion being spent on the World Cup.

"The success of the Confederations Cup proves the correct choice of Brazil to host the World Cup," the sports ministry said.

The British Open.

McIlroy tied with Nick Faldo, 56, who recently criticized the 24-year-old's lack of focus Zach Johnson worked out how to play the first round of the British Open. Rory McIlroy couldn't make anything work.

Bouncing back from a tough loss last weekend, Johnson began with a 6-under 66 on a sunny Thursday at Muirfield — another brilliant opening after a 65 at Lytham last year.

"I don't know what the secret is," Johnson said. "I hit some nice shots and obviously I putted really, really well."

Now, he needs to finish the job.

A year ago, the 2007 Masters champion followed up with a 74 in the second round on the way to a ninth-place finish.

"This game demands resilience," Johnson said. "That just comes with experience. That certainly comes with embracing what's happened and then also throwing it behind you and plodding along to the future."

The immediate future looks pretty bleak for McIlroy, who only last August won his second major title with a run-away victory at the U.S. PGA Championship. He showed no signs of snapping out of his baffling slump this season, struggling mightily to a 79 that marked the second-worst round of his Open career.

The only time McIlroy shot worse was an 80 at St. Andrews in 2010, but that was more a product of a brutal wind than poor shots.

Tiger in the hunt

By the time Tiger Woods finally made his way up to the 18th green, the bleachers were half empty and long shadows crept across the fairway after more than five hours on the course.

Tour de France leader Chris Froome is so dominant that even when he loses time he extends his lead.

The British rider was hit by a 20-second penalty on Thursday's 18th stage up L'Alpe d'Huez, but it made little difference as he increased his advantage over his main rival Alberto Contador to more than five minutes.
